11.31 For the New Brag. "THE DETTER PART."

> I've over cought from childhood's hour, True happiness to flud ; Thro' overy earthly scene and power, With eager, carpest mind; And I have learned with aching heart, This world given bot the " Lotter part"

When my young heaft was bounding light, With a pulse of joy and glee, And summer days were long and bright, They seemed to shine for ree; But yer, a vold was in my heart, That told me of a " better part,"

As near the verge of youth I drow, And tred her flow'ry ways, While emiles and tears, alternative, threw Their shadows and their raya, A something whispered to my lieses, "Bill thou must erck that 'heller part"

I turned, and sought mid pleasures train, . Where the voice of myeth was high ... I found their joys were miz'd with pale, That pleasures bloom to die; I turned away with sick ned heart, And longed to find the " better part."

I seezed the erroll of ancient love. With caper oye and hand, I trecod their columns n'er and o'er, Their myelie deputa to scan ; But oh, they have not to my heart The boon I cought, the "better part."

I bowed me at the shifte of love. And placed my offerioge there; It was repaid, but did not prove The bliss I longed to share : A voice still whispered to my heart, Thou hast not sought the "botter part." Upon Creator's works I gazed,

The hand that such a love displaye, Thro' all His works to shine, The wonders taught my restless heart, Where I might find the "botter part." There's comething in the human breast, That, go where'er you will, By all the flattering world entresalt-There's romething emply said;

And read the power divine :

An aching void within the breast That tells, "wo lack the "better part." Newmarket C. W. May 11th, 'Co.
